Introducing the SonoLith by Acolyte Instruments, a revolutionary, tactile, sonic experience invented by Chris Andersen (2024). The SonoLith is our innovative interpretation of a lithophone.

The lithophone is a historic instrument made out of stone, traditionally struck percussively, or sometimes rubbed to produce various frequencies (singing stones or klangstein).

The SonoLith differs from a traditional lithophone in a handful of ways. For one, the SonoLith is made completely from aluminum. Another, and perhaps the most important difference, is our ability to tune the SonoLith with impeccable accuracy. This enables us to create sculptures with a wide variety of scales, frequencies and tunings. Another very important difference is that each frequency produced by plates has its' own dedicated resonance chamber, enabling maximum volume resonance and sustain.
